WOMAN SUFFRAGE TO SWEEP COUNTRY SAYS JUDGE

Ben B. Lindsey of the Children's Court in Denver Prophesies Entrance of Women Into National Politics.

Denver, Colo., Oct 16.—In the Denver Express of recent date, Judge Ben B. Lindsey of the Children's court gave out as his opinion that the victory of woman suffrage in California was but a forecast of the entrance of women into national politics. He said:

"The unfair methods of the anti-suffragists are fully understood."

"The cause of suffrage will sweep over this country until women shall vote in every state as they do in Colorado, and we shall look back upon the arguments and opposition against it as we do upon the mistakes and ignorance of the dark ages."

because of this fact would be as absurd as to deny them the right to participate in church socials, in neighborhood gatherings, their various clubs in the church and out of the church, because similar amanuensis traits sometimes develop in individual women. But these exceptional things are no excuse for the general charges against all women, that have been a part of the campaign ammunition of the anti-suffragists. Such methods in fighting the righteous demand of women for their political rights are as unjust as they are illogical and absurd.

When the unfair methods of the anti-suffragists are fully understood, the cause of suffrage will sweep over this country until women shall vote in every state as they do in Colorado, and we shall look back upon the arguments and opposition against it as we do upon the mistakes and ignorance of the dark ages."

National Fruit Paper Publishers Very Favorable Mention of Products of Eddy County Orchards.

A number of Carlsbad peaches shipped to New York recently attracted considerable attention. The fine quality of the fruit and its size called forth the following notice from the Frankman's Guide, a fruit growers' paper of wide repute:

The first car of New Mexico peaches to arrive in New York market came in Thursday morning from the Rio Pecos orchard of Carlsbad, New Mexico, to Lyons Bros' company. The fruit was packed in California style boxes. The peaches were perfect specimens of the Elberta, impressive in color, conformation and size. It would be hard to imagine a more ideally shaped Elberta, and the condition of the fruit was all that could be desired. Once the buyers woke up to the fine qualities of these peaches, they were eager to take hold, and it is good betting that the price of this first car (around $1.00), will be materially increased when the next one is offered.

The trees on which these peaches were grown are four year old, and the owner of the orchard received seven-and-a-half cents per box, f. o. b. Deducting expenses of picking, cutting, wrapping, packing, and loading the net price received by the grower was 65¢ cents per box, or about $25 per acre. A carload was 1,000 or 1,000 twenty-pound boxes. Altogether, from the lower Pecos valley of New Mexico (Carlsbad, Mimbres, Artesia, and Hope), there were fifty carloads of Elberta peaches shipped this season in round numbers, a million pounds.

• THE ROCKY FORD MELON. •

(The Earth)

There were 250,000 carloads of cantaloupe this season. This was about 200 carloads short of the usual crop, but the growers are well satisfied. The cantaloupe is one of the mainstays of the Arkansas valley of Colorado, and, since it is a variety of rare quality, it always will be so.

The father of the Rocky Ford cantaloupe was the late G. W. Swink. Indeed, Mr. Swink was the father of irrigation and everything grown by irrigation in the valley. Originally, Mr. Swink owned a large area of the valley, ran cattle on the native pasture. He was prosperous and comfortable, but he lacked garden and orchard, and shade. He observed that water thrown from the kitchen in the early spring caused plants to spring up and grow throughout the year. Even trees took root under this chance irrigation, and it occurred to him that, possibly, he might like water from the well for a small garden. Accordingly, one spring, he made a garden, irrigating it from the well. But the water was too cold to be poured directly upon the plants, and so he adopted the plan of drawing a large quantity in the evening, and letting it stand all the next day in the sun. This made the water acceptable to the plants, and he had a fine garden until late fall. The next year, by increasing the capacity of his reservoir, he had a larger garden. Finally, other settlers followed his example, and soon came ditches in the river, and canals and ditches, until now one-half millions acres of the valley west of the Kansas line are under irrigation.

Before his neighbors joined him, however, Mr. Swink introduced the cantaloupe in the valley. Unwilling to make the experiment with seed to be obtained in the United States, he wrote to the United States commissioner of agriculture, requesting that a quantity of the best seed obtainable from abroad be sent to him. This was in the fall, and the commissioner immediately wrote to United States consul stationed on the Mediterranean coast for seed of the "cantaloupe," which was the best melon grown in those countries. Quantities were forwarded by the several consuls in response to the commissioner's request, and from the lot he selected a seed grown in Spain, and sent a small package of it to Mr. Swink. This seed Mr. Swink planted in carefully prepared ground, nurturing the young plants with warm water, and behold, in August, melons of the finest flavor ever known!

From this, the cantaloupe industry has grown in the valley. Indeed, it was the beginning of the industry in the United States; for, until then, this species of melon in America was the "nutmeg," which had been evolved of the malpighi "musk-melon," only a short remove from the pumpkin—since then, varieties of the cantaloupe of peculiarly sweet flavor from Rocky Ford seed have taken root in other valleys and small districts of the United States, especially of the Santa Fe southwest, as Mesilla Valley, Salt River valley, and Pecos valley, and their melons have become famous in the markets. However, the Rocky Ford variety has lost no prestige by the competition. One corporation, which grows cantaloupes for the New York and Boston markets, following the advance of the season from the Southern Atlantic seaboard westward, through the Carolinas, Tennessee, and so on, has its largest plantation at Rocky Ford. On this plantation, besides its greatest crops of melons, the corporation grows the seed planted on all of its farms in the United States.

They may very agreeably take the cook's place and prepare a meal fit for that king at least, but when dinner is over and all those tins and dishes are staring them in the face, few there are who can keep back a frown and perhaps an audible grumble.

Englishman may have a reputation for being especially kind and thoughtful to their wives, but it took an Englishman to solve the problem of cooking without using so many pans.

He invented paper bags which are made in various sizes, and all one has to do is to clip a piece chicken, turkey or roast into one of these bags, seal it up, shove it into the oven and await the result, which never fails to be satisfactory, and most everyone who has used them claim that the flavor is much better than can be gotten by any other method of cooking.

When "Mr. Turkey" is done brown and removed from the oven the dampiness of the home simply throws the bag away, and there is no soiling of herily white hands in trying to clean a greasy pan.

They are not experimenting on yourself when you take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a cold as that preparation has won its great reputation and extensive sale by its remarkable cures of colds, and can always be depended upon. It is equally valuable for adults and children and may be given to young children with implicit confidence as it contains no harmful drug. Sold by all druggists.
